Different stakeholders carry out interventions in vulnerable communities in urban, rural and dispersed areas, usually driven by altruistic and philanthropic intentions and may lack scientific support. They require the support of professionals who recognize the relevance of their work and are willing to get actively involved.

We seek to complement and enhance interventions carried out by different stakeholders, provide feedback and solutions to communities and governmental entities, enhance the recognition of stakeholder, promote trans-professional works, develop research, projects, policies and innovations that allow the strengthening of public health oriented towards primary health care, be spokespersons and replicators of The Network; TUFH recommendations and provide work material for Task Forces. GESPSS is the Epidemiology, Public Health and Health Services Group, which is made up of health professionals from different areas; specialists in epidemiology and public health who provide free support to stakeholders at the national (Colombia) and international level (Latin America). GESPSS provides training space for students and professionals interested in public health. Through an alliance with The Network; TUFH and WONCA, we will provide additional support with international advisers (It is already in process). Let's make the recommendations come true. Our greatest success to date has been the work carried out with the NGO Bancalimentos which seeks to ensure food security for rural population in Colombia through recycling and reuse of materials = double impact; nutritional and environmental. We have been able to measure and demonstrate its impact on the well-being of communities. Let's get members involve.
